Week ending November 21, 2025

Global markets experienced heightened volatility last week, with equities posting further declines and continuing their worst run since the tariff-driven sell-offs in April. The technology sector, particularly AI-related stocks, faced renewed profit-taking and bubble concerns, despite strong earnings from NVIDIA. Ambiguity around the Federal Reserve's next policy move added to market uncertainty, expectations around the Fed's action at December's meeting have been shifting wildly. U.S. Treasury yields slipped late in the week as expectations for a December rate cut rose sharply. The delayed September jobs report showed solid hiring but a rising unemployment rate, further muddying the economic outlook. Bitcoin suffered a steep sell-off, ending the week below $85k well off its October $12k high. Amid these swings, the importance of diversification becomes apparent.

Fixed Income Markets Overview

- The Federal Reserve's policy outlook remains clouded by incomplete economic data due to the government shutdown. Rate cut probabilities for the December Fed meeting surged from 30% to over 70% by Friday.
- U.S. Treasury yields fell late in the week, with the 10-year yield dropping from 4.15% to 4.06%. Two-year Treasury yields declined by ~10 basis points, while 30-year yields edged slightly higher.
- The September Nonfarm Payrolls report showed stronger-than-expected job growth but a higher unemployment rate. Continuing claims for jobless benefits rose to a four-year high.
- The Fed's minutes revealed concerns about the reliability of economic data and the risks of further rate cuts amid persistent inflation.

Equity Markets Overview

- Equities finished lower, with the Nasdaq posting its third consecutive weekly decline. The tech-heavy Nasdaq fell 2.7% for the week, while the S&P 500 and Dow saw smaller declines just under 2%.
- AI-related stocks, especially the "Magnificent Seven," faced profit-taking and valuation concerns. NVIDIA's strong earnings failed to sustain a rally, as investor sentiment quickly reversed.
- Market breadth deteriorated, with fewer stocks trading above their 200-day moving averages. Volatility spiked, with the Cboe VIX reaching as high as 28 before settling around 23.
- Defensive sectors like health care and energy saw increased interest amid the tech sell-off.
- S&P 500 profit margins rose to a record 13.1% in Q3, marking seven consecutive quarters of increases.
